32nd Alaska State Legislature ~ 1st Session

Tenth Edition

HIGHLIGHTS

The Coronavirus continues to dominate, and a political fight is brewing. In a letter to all legislators last week, Governor Dunleavy made it crystal clear he doesn't see a need for a disaster declaration but does want a small bill. He believes we are well on the road to victory.

The Governor argues it would be a big mistake to re-enter a state of disaster without an "apparent catalyst". It will "irreparably harm the trust Alaskans have placed in us". He said this move could also mislead travelers that our situation is deteriorating costing many good jobs this summer.

Instead, he told legislators he wants a targeted bill that would use temporary laws to distribute vaccines; provide limited liability to health officials; continue enhanced telemedicine; and allow the state to receive federal money like $8 million in family food assistance. Period.

Health care organizations, municipalities, businesses, and others disagree and oppose ending the declaration. Biggest concerns are about the governor's decision to drop mandatory airport tests and the state's ability to accept federal food aid for the poor.

Meanwhile, the House COVID-19 bill (HB 76) passed Friday 22 - 15. Rep. LeBon was the sole Republican supporter who's not part of the house coalition. It responds to many worries by retroactively extending the declaration to September 30, 2021 and handles all other key issues (as we understand), not just the ones Dunleavy identified.

11 of 12 proposed amendments failed. They were offered by R's, including at least one containing the Governor's proposal. The only successful amendment prevented use of the federal COVID-19 money to pay for abortions that aren't mandated by state law.

Final debate summarized the divide. Opponents of the bill agree with Dunleavy - it goes too far and tramples rights. We are in recovery mode and should rely more on personal responsibility. They OPPOSE use of the disaster word. The kids and economy were most cited as reasons to move on.

Yes votes said this pandemic is a once in a lifetime situation ~ and the threat level is still high. We must stay the course; keep Governor in the lead with flexible emergency powers but some limits on his authority; and set up an effective system that gets the job done. It now heads to the other body.

The Senate is more Administration friendly but not lock step. The latest version of SB 56 \(HSS\) ends the disaster emergency and covers Dunleavy's issues list, plus a few more including online charitable gaming and occupational/professional licensing. But has no mandatory airport testing.

It's up Monday at 1pm in Finance.

New idea. The HSS Department is thinking about providing COVID-19 vaccinations to travelers at our busiest airports at least during the summer fishing and tourist seasons. They're looking for interested contractors who would provide a one-dose vaccine to willing travelers in a private, secure space.

The first 2021 COVID bill passed the Legislature last week. SB 24 (Wilson) will allow non-profits to hold meetings by teleconference and corporations to hold remote shareholder meetings. It's one of several pieces of legislation addressing state laws suspended during the pandemic.

Good news, bad news. Nearly 50% of Alaskan prisoners have received the vaccine but they need to hit 80% for "herd immunity". This is a challenge since the system is dealing with vaccination hesitancy and tight living conditions conducive to rapid disease spread. Alaska prisons remain closed to visitors.

Attorney General Treg Taylor appeared before the Senate Judiciary Committee for a confirmation hearing. As expected, the committee focused on the Governor's handling of the pandemic, a topic that is near and dear to not so happy Chair Reinbold.

He defended the pandemic emergency orders but said our disaster act - with broad executive authority - works for events like earthquakes but is a "clunky tool" for a long running pandemic. The Legislature may want to look at changes based on our recent COVID-19 experience.

Too tough on crime, The Alaska Criminal Justice Commission recommends the Legislature adopt a "second look" law. This would give juveniles who were tried and sentenced as adults with life or close to life sentences a chance for parole after 15 years.

One Web Technology successfully completed its fifth satellite launch. They are hoping to cover 100% of the state by later this year. The primary goal to bring Internet access to rural and underserved communities. Alaska is the first step in their plan to go worldwide.

Another loss. Gail Phillips, Alaska's second woman House of Representatives Speaker, died at home Thursday reportedly of cancer. Born in Juneau in May 1944 as the first of seven daughters, she attended high school in Nome and attended the University of Alaska Fairbanks. Phillips was known as a member of the "Old Iditarod Gang" that helped create the Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race.

Phillips served in the Legislature from 1991-2001 as a Republican representing the Kenai Peninsula. We worked together in the 1995-1996 session.

BUDGET

Penny foolish? Senators are starting to question the wisdom of SB 74, the Governor's general obligation (g.o.) bond bill. It made more sense last year but maybe not so much anymore since we're getting over $1 billion in new federal COVID aid. Congress also may soon pass an infrastructure-funding bill.

Borrowing is expensive. And, why put us into debt with the COVID aid available, said Senate President Micciche recently. The bill is in Senate Finance. The most recent draft proposes $303 million in bonds. HFIN hears the House version on Tuesday.

Rep. Spohnholz filed a bill, HB 141 Appropriation Limit; Governor Budget, that would implement a Republican favorite – a spending cap. This one is based on the average of state spending over the past three years with allowances for inflation and population increases. Cap exclusions include the PFD, school bond debt reimbursements, and emergency spending.

Both House and Senate Finance Committees say they won't finish operating budget closeouts until they get a better handle on the exact details of American Rescue Plan Act funding. This may take a while. As we understand, May 19 is the target adjournment date.
