

2021 CAPITOL CURRENTS

32nd Alaska State Legislature ~ 1st Session

Sixth Edition

~ COVID 19 drama; Passing of 3 Former Legislators ~

HIGHLIGHTS

Governor Dunleavy had a bad week. He lost an experienced and effective Chief of Staff in the midst of a recall revival and came down with COVID 19. The Governor is now at home in Wasilla.

Tok Rep. Cronk (R) also tested positive, which required the house speaker to cancel most of Thursday and Friday in-person House and some Senate committee meetings. Tests and contact tracing are underway. Members who sat near Cronk are already in quarantine.

Just before these incidents, there was some discussion about relaxing Capitol COVID rules. The Legislative Council may still take that up but will need 8 votes for any changes, a fairly high bar. Mixed views have been expressed but caution is likely to prevail.

The Governor's Chief of Staff, Ben Stevens, resigned to take a job with ConocoPhillips as the vice president of external affairs and transportation. But there is a question about whether he received an ethics waiver from his former "agency head" that may be required in this situation. As we understand, he reports to his new boss Monday. Stay tuned as we wait for the AG response.

The state's COVID 19 vaccine allotment for March is 100,000 or more first doses with second doses coming right behind, according to Chief Medical Officer, Dr. Anne Zink. This will include Pfizer and Moderna batches. They are "super excited" to see the new shipment.

The jury is out on vaccine effectiveness against the new variants like the Brazilian and UK versions that have shown up in Alaska, but experts say they seem to protect against serious illness responsible for so many deaths and other miseries.

The Mat-Su has the highest daily case rate and one of the lowest vaccine rates. Rumors about federal assistance impacts were not exaggerated. We understand it's possible the state will forfeit millions if it doesn't have a public health disaster declaration in place by spring. Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) benefits are a particular worry.

A careful review is being conducted by lawmakers and health care providers of the Governor's 106 page Executive Order that would split the HSS Department in two. Commissioner Crum said it makes good sense to have a Department of Health and a Department of Family Services.

This would allow managers and 13 new employees to focus their energy. The proposal would cost $4.2 million for the second Commissioner's office. They say longer term savings are possible, working with stakeholders to find "nickels and dimes" across the board. The big cuts are done.

Following little testimony, the Senate State Affairs Committee moved three of the Governor's constitutional amendments, recognizing there are many more stops along the way. They include voter approval of tax increases; a tightened spending cap; enshrining the current PFD formula.

Dunleavy has said he won't support more taxes without a public vote on the approval amendment. All this will take time and could mean continued deficits for the next few years, according to the Governor's office. Senator Kawasaki says they are wasting efforts on these old ideas.

Bill Walker may try again in 2022. The former Governor recently disclosed that he's taking a close look at running and will decide after the Legislature adjourns, probably in the summer. Walker has been a visiting fellow at Harvard but says it's hard to sit on the sidelines with more work to be done.

We also learned last week that Permanent fund earnings are becoming an increasingly significant portion of our revenue stream and are #2 after Federal support. Oil Revenues are #3. The Fund's is now worth over $70 billion.

Rural and urban school districts are telling the government that lack of access to the Internet is a major barrier to online schooling. Senate Minority Leader Tom Begich, a member of the Education Committee, complained that the Administration is not on top of it.

Senate Finance talked last week about the lack of inflation proofing of the Alaska Mental Health Trust Fund. They urged the Board of Trustees to fix the problem to ensure fund durability over the long run.

Senate President Micciche is trying to patch things up between the Governor and the Senate Judiciary Committee (Chair Reinbold) with a better process that will get them back to "normalcy". He also said they are working toward a 90 day adjournment, but anything earlier is unlikely due to a late House start.

We were deeply saddened by the passing of three former Alaska State Legislators. Flags have been lowered to half-staff through March 1st for former Alaska State Representative Hugh 'Bud' Fate, who represented Fairbanks from 2001-2005. Bud was a dentist, retired U.S. Army Corporal, and President of the University Board of Regents.

He worked on the mapping of the Alcan Highway. He advocated for the Alaska Native Community. He was instrumental in setting up the Fairbanks Native Association. He also fought hard for the establishment of high schools in the Alaska rural communities, which helped end the era of sending rural children to boarding schools.

Katie Hurley, a good friend and colleague of mine was also a mentor for many women, died at the age of 99. She represented Wasilla from 1985-1986 in the Alaska House. She began her political career as an assistant to Territorial Governor Ernest Gruening. She was best known for serving as chief secretary to the Alaska Constitutional Convention.

She also was president of the State Board of Education, and Director of the Alaska Women's Commission. Katie was Chancy Croft's (D) running mate in 1978 – the first woman to win a primary for Lt. Governor in the State. Flags will fly at half-staff Tuesday, March 30, 2021 for her 100th birthday.

And, more sadness as news spread that former Alaska State Representative Mike Bradner, 84 passed away Friday night from COVID-19 complications. Mike served in the House representing Fairbanks from 1966 -1976. He was Speaker from 1975 to 1976. Many remember him as the person who set up the Public Defender System. He was often seen in the halls of the legislature or hosting interviews on Gavel to Gavel. Mike and brother Tim publish the Alaska Legislative Digest that many read to stay in touch with key legislative issues. Flags will fly at half-staff this week.
